Governor's Civil Rights Awards Day a big success

(CHARLESTON, West Virginia) – The Charleston Job Corps Center proudly hosted nearly 200 guests this week, for the fifth annual Governor's Civil Rights Awards Day. The annual event is sponsored by several schools, businesses and civic organizations, including the Charleston center.

Members of the West Virginia Supreme Court and state legislature joined community and business leaders, law enforcement personnel and other individuals at the Charleston center to participate in the event. Governor Joe Manchin, III, honored participants with a plaque and medal to commemorate the event.

The Honorable Brent D. Benjamin of the West Virginia Supreme Court meets with Charleston Job Corps Center student Chris Chapman during the 5th annual Governor's Civil Rights Awards Day.

Charleston Culinary Arts students provided a wonderful menu while Hotel Clerk students formally welcomed and greeted the 183 guest in attendance.

“Students were elated to meet Governor Manchin, civil rights activists and other community leaders,” said Center Director Ronni Spudich. “It was a fantastic event for everyone involved. The Charleston Job Corps Center is proud to host such an important event.”
