About MTC

MTC is one of the largest private Job Corps contractors for the U.S. Department of Labor. MTC manages and operates multiple Job Corps centers in many states, as well as several contracts for recruitment and placement of students across the U.S. The depth of MTC's executive team, corporate university, and research institute ensures experts are on hand to find innovative solutions and to share best practices for training young adults for tomorrow's workforce.

How Can You Support Job Corps?

The ultimate success of the Job Corps graduate depends on how well the program meets the training needs of local and regional businesses. Without employer support and input, Job Corps would not be the success it is. There are many ways for employers to get involved, such as:

- Joining the center's community relations council to strategize how the center and community can work together
- Joining the center's workforce council to review training curriculum in order to make Job Corps training programs relevant in today's job market
- Volunteering your time and talent as a guest speaker, mentor, or tutor
- Providing an internship to students who need to apply the skills they've learned
- Hiring a qualified Job Corps graduate at a competitive wage (qualifies for a Federal Targeted Jobs Tax Credit)
